. "Why Am I Not Seeing Any" The Cogito ergo sum as a reasoning process. If we are capable of reasoning, then we must be able to deduce that we are not seeing any, and thus, any and everything we see must be an illusion. Why the common saying? For example, "There's no point in arguing with an idiot," or "What am I wasting my time doing?" A: You're not seeing anything because you're not seeing your own eyes. You're seeing "X" because you're not seeing yourself. I like to think that's why we typically say "there's no point" when arguing with anyone because the "point" of arguing with a fool would be futile anyway. Note the source of the quote The Christians say that there is a God, and that he governs the world, and that there is no evil but there is a power which is strong enough to overcome it and make it good. But they tell us that we see God and enjoy heaven when we die, and that is true enough, but I am afraid that the truth is a harder victory than they find it. The atheist says that there is no God, and that life is an illusion produced by an illusion. He wishes he could persuade us to give up our habitual visions, but he cannot, because he has no evidence to offer except his own ignorance. And a related quote: When faced with a contrived argument, an opponent may say, "Why am I not seeing any?" It is a subtly mischievous move, and easily answered. The reason is that "seeing" not only requires the eyes, but also requires a sense of sight, and that is not given by the opponent. Here are some more examples: I saw her kiss him. I saw her eat an entire box of cookies. I saw her hit him in the face. I saw her reach into his pocket and take out his wallet. The words "seeing" and "seeing any" can be used to describe vision, hearing, taste, smell, touch, etc.
